Last updated 9th December 2017. Maharaj first saw the sun's rays early in the morning through the lashes of his eyelids. He was ten. He was the son of the king of the Mukunds and his queen. he could speak the language of the people well. The people loved him, but hated his father. They also hated his mother. He grew up hearing sordid tales of how his father treated his wife. the mother. It made no difference to him whether he was the son of the king of the Mukunds or a filthy jackal who never even bothered to correct his dialect. the King frowned on the boy and the queen supported the boy. He had always been the favorite of the queen and his love for her was a source of consolation. Whenever he heard stories of his mother's sufferings he cried silently and went to his favourite as a refuge. Once the queen discovered this habit of his she tried to make a match for him with a beautiful lady of the royal household. She took the boy to her chamber and asked him to see the lady who had caught his eye. The queen was a kind woman and wanted to do good to the people of her country. However, she knew that to get her son married she would have to pay heavily. Perhaps she thought that the people would know the lady she had chosen. However. I don't think she worried about the people. He, however, was excited. He was a kind child. He was the son of the king and he had every right to be happy. So he called an attendant who took him to his favorite and asked him to show him the girl. The attendant brought the girl to him.

She was very tall and beautiful and very friendly. She was a good child. She was kind and gentle. She was kind and compassionate towards him and toward the attendants in her care. All of them liked her. After an hour's conversation she too was keen on him. They looked at each other and smiled. The boy smiled at her and began to talk to her and ask her questions. After a few minutes of talking. she invited him to her house. He agreed and asked his mother to come too. It was made very clear to the mother by her father that she was to stay in her room and not come out. His mother didn't argue. She just looked at him and left with the attendants.
